HOSTILE

Death comes often on Raven's Ridge, and tonight it's coming again. But this time, it's taking the long way home...

Our tale begins as a band of thieves robs a racetrack's armored car, and buries the loot high on the Ridge -- but when one of their cohorts is jailed and in danger of telling all, they must return early to recover the treasure. In the strange surroundings and different season, however, their map is almost useless...and soon they find themselves armed with little more than flashlights and the misty memory of a few key landmarks. Unfortunately, in the living forest, landmarks can easily shift and transform over time, and your mind can play cruel tricks on you... especially when you're afraid.

The group begins to turn upon itself. Did someone alter the map? Did one of the thieves come back in the intervening months and take the loot for themselves? Accusations fly, but soon all the recriminations come to a screeching halt when they realize that someone -- or something -- is tracking them through the woods, hunting them down one by one; a shadowy presence with deadly skill and an axe to grind. Literally. Indeed, even hardened criminals become fleeing, frightened pawns on unfamiliar turf, with a sadistic killer on their heels, as each begins to ask themselves the same chilling question...

Can anyone survive the horrifying night of unbridled torture on Raven's Ridge?
